EUREKA GULCH, Jefferson County, M. T., Feb. 7.-[Special to the Independent]-Nothing of special interest has transpired in this camp since my last letter to the Inresumed on the Lady Leith mine and ore is being extracted from a lead running east from the main shaft. Mrs. Leith and daughter Mamie came in last week to remain for the winter. Their advent adds onsiderably to the social status of the amp, and were received with a proper degree of pride and gratification by the hongree of pride and gratification by the non-est m'ners of Eureka. Mr. Haskell, of Helena, also came in, but returned on the following day. He expects to return soon and begin the erection of buildings on the Little Alma property, and also to improve the new road by way of Monitor and Ten Mile to Rimini. He is a rustler and will prove a valuable man in this section.

STREAM TIN. I believe this is the only section in Montana where tin ore has been found. The headwaters of Monitor, Ten Mile and Basin, not only contain placer gold in paying quantities, but also stream, or todl tin. These nuggets of tin resemble petrified wood in appearance, but are heavy and pan like gold. This leads to the question of whether there may not be tin mines or lodes in this vicinity. Placer gold is adof whether there may not be tin mines or lodes in this vicinity. Placer gold is admitted to come from quartz lodes which have been gradually worn away for ages of time by glaciers, and the freezing and thawing incident to the change of the seasons and deposited in streams along with the gravel collected there by running water. If this is so of gold, why not also of tin? It seems equally plausible. One thing is certain, very few prospectors know how to prospect for tin. It is found in quartz the same as gold and when pulverized and "panned out" remains in the bottom in the form of a brown sand or powder. I believe there are tin mines to be found in this district and hope to chronicle the fact before another season goes by. BUNTING LYNX.

A gentleman who owns a fine silver mine about one mile south of the Peerless Jennie suspended operations on his tunnel one day last week to trail up a lynx which had been disturbing his slumbers by nightly prowling around his cabin. He started out on what he supposed was the trail on snow shoes and went up a mountain about a mile high. When near the top he came to a ledge of rock containing a sort of cave which looked very much like the den of wild animals. An examination showed a fresh track leading in but none coming out. Here was a chance for game. Depositing his snowshoes at the mouth of the cave and drawing his forty-five ready for action he walked bravely in. It was a cold, dark, dismal place, with no ray of sunshine to lighten the surrounding gloom. Groping his way carefully along over the loose rocks he had penetrated about one hundred and fifty feet when he was brought to a sudden standstill by a low fierce growl, and gazing into the darkness beyond saw two glaring eye-balls that denoted the presence of some wild beast. Without a moment's hesitation he raised his six-shooter, and taking such aim at the shining orbs as he could, pulled the trigger. There was a deafening report, followed by one of the most terrific, ear-piercing howls ever heard. Our wild-cat hunter now realized for the first time the danger of his situation, and without loss of time stumbled out of the cave as rapidly as he could. Fear lent swiftness to his limbs, and in an incredibly short space of time he emerged into the light, and, mounting his snowshoes sped swiftly down the steep sides of the mountain. He looked back only once, and then he saw an object that almost made his hair stand on end. It was a huge mountain lion following swiftly on his traii. This one look almost proved his destruction. Immediately in front of him was a high snowdrift which momentarily checked the speed of his shoes. He was gentleman who owns a fine silver minhis trail. This one look almost proved his destruction. Immediately in front of him was a high snowdrift which momentarily checked the speed of his shoes. He was thrown off his balance and plunged headlong into the drift. Now, he thought, he would have to fight for his life, but resolved to lie quiet in hopes that by some chance the enraged lion might pass him by. This saved him. For the lion followed on after the snowshoes, which, being released from all control, and momentarily hid from sight of the lion, sped down the mountain side with the swiftness of a swallow and were shivered to atoms against the pine trees far below. All danger being passed our nimrod crawled out of the drift and after a hard tramp through the deep snow finally reached camp at a late hour in the night. He then and there resolved to never again trail a lynx (?) to his den. He has a better plan now and one fraught with less danger; he poisons them. One night not long ago he laid a piece of bacon out on the snow and a large tasselated lynx coming along made a meal off it, and the next morning was found stretched out dead as a door nail. It is not stated whether or not any poison was used to accelerate the action of the bacon. Some of the bacon sold to prospectors would certainly do the business without extraneous ald and wind up the erratic career of the toughest old lynx in the mountains.

The weather is still warm and pleasant, a salubrious chinook is now soughing through the pine forests and settling the snow rapidly. All proclaim that nothing like it has ever been seen by the oldest inhabitant.

ROME, Feb. 7 .- Signor Cavaltotti, a member of the extreme left, to-day renewed his tack on the government's foreign policy. le accused the government of seeking to ntain peace by means of formidable armaments, instead of promoting friendship among the nations. Crispi replied:
"No one desired peace more than the government, but it cannot disarm when throughout Europe armaments are being pushed forward with redoubled activity and when fresh fortresses are being erected along the line of the It-lian frontier.
Italy cannot from Arcadian sentiments be first to disarm; that would be adopting a childish policy, unworthy of practical statesmen." Although the house warmly applauded the premier distrust grows on every side over the condition of the country arising from the financial burdens due to the armaments. When the debate on the budget opens on the 15th the government will probably find a hostile majority arrayed against it, especially on the proposal to increase the taxation on landed

When he was defeated for re-election to the senate she cheered him up and told him his chances for getting the presidential nomination were better out of the senate than in it, and mother had an idea, too, that father would be nominated here by this convention. Father was never sanguine, but mother stuck to it, though we all feared the Gresham movement would kill father's chances. When at last the nomination was made, I don't think mother was surprised a bit, and she told father he needn't concern himself about the election at all, as he would go to the white honse just as sure as he lived. HELENA, Oct. 7, 1887.

I was suffering from an unusually bad cough, my lungs were sore and congested, and I consulted one of the best physicians in Helena, whose prescriptions failed to relieve me. I became alarmed, and at the suggestion of a friend purchased a bottle of Acker's English Remedy for coughs, and after taking it according to directions was completely cured. I therefore cheerfully recommend it.
